Mission and Biblical Interpretation: Toward a Missional Hermeneutic

AAR/SBL 2007 Annual Meeting, November 17-20, 2007

Saturday, November 17 from 1:00 pm - 3:30 pm.

What would it mean to read the Bible with an explicit methodological starting point in an ecclesial location understood as fundamentally missional? Join us for our sixth annual session focused on such questions, as Princeton Theological Seminary professors Darrell Guder and J. Ross Wagner present their work on missional hermeneutics in the seminary classroom. We anticipate a thought-provoking and productive discussion

Theme: Living in a Secular Age: Charles Taylor and the Philosophy of Religion

The Post-Secular Condition: The Usefulness of Belief in the Philosophy of Charles Taylor

F. B. A. Asiedu, Middlebury College

The paper is an assessment of the explicitly “religious turn” in Charles Taylor’s philosophy. Part of its objective is to assess Taylor’s critique of modernity and its secularisms, by interrogating the viability of religious belief in Taylor’s recent work. I suggest that it is possible to speak about the usefulness of belief in Taylor’s philosophy as a way of overcoming some of the problems of modernity, while obviating some of the objections of some of Taylor’s critics who see his turn towards the transcendent as nothing more than an apology for his Christianity. I propose that a post-secularist form of “believing,” which has both religious and non-religious versions, achieves Taylor’s objectives and precludes the fears of his critics.

Secularization, Recomposition, and Bad Faith in Contemporary Christian Ethics

Jennifer A. Herdt, University of Notre Dame

The attempt to rethink Christian ethics in terms of virtues, practices, narratives, and traditions represents a reaction against an earlier emphasis on public intelligibility that contributed to secularization from within. Critical of individualism and autonomy, this movement seeks to guard a distinctive Christian identity through absorption into the world created by scripture and formation by the practices of the church. To commit oneself precisely to authority, tradition, conformity, might be seen as an attempt to return to a pre-modern integrated form of existence—an attempt that must inevitably fail, since the volitional element decisively transforms the situation. The question to ask is whether it is possible to sustain this form of creative religious “recomposition” (as well as others that seem similarly self-defeating) while at the same time being honest about the fact that we live not only in the world constituted by scriptural narratives but also in a secular age.

Theme: Pragmatism and Biblical Hermeneutics: A Discussion of the Work of Peter Ochs

The session will discuss the theoretical contribution of the work of Peter Ochs in terms of its contribution to the field of American pragmatism and to theoretical advances in biblical hermeneutics as well as in contemporary analyses of religious community and inter-religious dialogue. In particular the session will discuss the impact of Professor Ochs' work on the recently developed set of practices referred to as scriptural reasoning. Panelists will speak from the perspective of their various disciplines including, philosophy of religion, Christian theology and contemporary Jewish philosophy.

Wildcard Session

Theme: Theological Readings of Economics

This session is about religious voices in political economy. Deeper theological engagement with economic theory is needed because (a) much contemporary religious discussion of economics is ill-informed and superficial (b) economics dominates contemporary culture. In the session panel members will consider a number of recent theological readings of economics, followed by discussion. The emphasis will be economic theory rather than particular economic issues because religious engagement with particular issues depends on our view of the relationship between theology and the economic tools we use to consider the various issues. At the end of the session we will discuss the proposal for a new AAR group on religion and economics and its relationship to the Religion and Social Sciences Section.

Theme: The Tenure Book(s): How to Strategize Your Publications to Increase Your Chances of Tenure and Promotion

Sponsored by AAR, SBL, and Publishers Weekly

In the good old days, tenure was a given if you pumped out a few well-received articles. Now, the expectation is sometimes for junior scholars to write two books and several articles, all of which need to make an impact in their field and be timed appropriately to help their tenure bids. As the bar is raised ever higher, how can junior faculty strategize their publications to further the goal of tenure? In this session, scholars from three different types of institutions will speak to the tenure expectations in their schools, while two editors from university presses will discuss the changing demands for the scholarly book in the marketplace. Questions addressed will include the following: How have scholarly expectations changed about the number and nature of pre-tenure publications? Do I need to publish a second book, and what does the second book have to be? How is it possible to publish two highly academic books when many prestigious university presses are seeking to acquire commercially appealing books over limited-audience scholarly monographs? How should I time my tenure book (or books) for maximum impact? How much is a revered university press imprimatur worth in getting tenure? Does an edited anthology count toward tenure? As always for the Publishers Weekly session, forty-five minutes will be allotted for audience questions.
