I am kind of shocked by how little the vote choice of white Christians changed across the last three elections.

There was not some sort of dramatic lurch to the right in 2016. Honestly, it was just business as usual.

I have put "evangelical" in parenthesis because people increasingly do not use the term because it is so associated with politics. They would have used the term in the past to express their high regard for the Bible and conviction that Jesus is "good news" (Greek: euangelion).
